Christmas Feast

There is nothing like sitting at a holiday dinner with friends and loved ones while snow gathers outside the window and the smells of a freshly roasted chicken, country ham, and cheesy ale soup fill the air. The good dishes have been brought out, the candlesticks lit, and the table set just so. All that is left is to enjoy it. This is where we bond with family. These are the times to savor, the moments we carry with us long after the meal's end.

Sweet Traditions

Gathering in the kitchen while Christmas cookies are being made is a time-honored tradition that brings the old and young alike together at the heart of the house. Family recipes come out, bringing up memories, and candies are passed around. Baking tools are spread across counters, and stories are told as the scent of buttery treats fills the air. Some cookies are tasted hot out of the oven, others are placed on a plate to snack on throughout the day, and a couple are saved for the kids to put out for Santa's arrival.

Cozy Breakfast

“Nobody wants to be anywhere but here as hot mugs warm hands and conversation warms hearts.”

A holiday breakfast is about waking up slowly and chatting over a steaming cup of coffee while planning the fun for the day ahead. Family members still in pajamas gradually gather in the breakfast nook, cozing up next to each other. Locally made jams, syrups, and honey are brought out, along with special breakfast items, to be savored. Nobody wants to be anywhere but here as hot mugs warm hands and conversation warms hearts.

Self-Care Time

“Rejuvenate to be the best version of yourself. Everything else can wait.”

We all need moments to ourselves during the holidays to recharge. Enjoy handmade soap and a mistletoe-scented candle. Set a fresh lavender bouquet in a glass vase nearby to rest your eyes on while you soak in a hot bath. Lay your favorite fluffy towel out to wrap yourself in afterward. Rejuvenate to be the best version of yourself. Everything else can wait. Taking this moment of self-care will be something to hold on to throughout the day.

Social Hour

Late in the evening, after the kids have gone to bed and the day's activities are done, it's the perfect time to pour that whiskey you've been looking forward to sharing. Craft beers and locally made dessert wine are brought out, and savory snacks, such as sausage, cheese, and crackers, are enjoyed. The lights are dim, and you sink into the cushioned chairs as you share stories you've heard every year at Christmas but don't mind hearing again. It's all comforting. There's no better way to end the day than spending time with the ones you love.
